VP of Engineering at Auctane

January 11, 2026, Lewis managed Miguel directly

Miguel is a supremely talented mobile developer with a passion for building awesome apps. I never had to encourage him, it was the opposite. One of my first memories together is him telling me all the different ways our app could be better. He single-handedly took our iOS app rating over 4.5 stars. On top of that he's one of the nicest people I've ever met. He has a genuine care and appreciation for the work that is rare these days. I will always miss working with him, maybe things will swing back around and we'll get the band back together. If you're considering working with Miguel, pull the trigger! He's one of the best out there.

I had the pleasure of working alongside Miguel for four years, during which time I served as a QA Engineer on his team. Over those years, I came to know him as a consistently reliable, skilled, and collaborative engineer. Miguel was responsible for maintaining two separate mobile applications, each with evolving requirements and growing user bases. He handled this responsibility with exceptional professionalism and technical skill, implementing countless new features that supported the company's rapid growth. Whether integrating complex functionality or improving performance under tight deadlines, Miguel always delivered work of the highest quality.
What sets Miguel apart is not only his technical competence but also his communication and problem-solving abilities. He is an excellent collaborator—open to feedback, proactive in discussions, and always willing to lend his expertise to ensure shared goals are met. He has a particular talent for identifying the root cause of issues, which greatly streamlined our QA efforts and contributed to a smoother development pipeline overall.
Miguel would be an outstanding addition to any development team. I have full confidence in his abilities and work ethic, and I would welcome the opportunity to work with him again.

I had the pleasure of working with Miguel in the early days of ShipStation where he built their mobile app from the ground up. From architecture to final release, he was a key part of a very small team that handled the full stack of mobile development for an app that now has 100k+ downloads.

Beyond his technical chops, Miguel brings great energy to any team. He's sharp, collaborative, and consistently upbeat — the kind of person who is the model for good company culture. Whether solving a tricky bug or pitching in on a cross-team initiative, he was always dependable and easy to work with.

If you're looking for a solid mobile developer who can build, ship, and keep morale high along the way, I'd highly recommend Miguel.

Staff Mobile Engineer at Auctane

As a fellow senior mobile engineer, I've worked with a lot of devs who can write code. Miguel is the rare one who understands the bigger picture: app architecture, CI/CD, analytics, user flows, edge cases—he's solid across the board.

We collaborated on multiple cross-platform initiatives, and his instincts were consistently spot-on. He's the kind of teammate who reviews your PRs with care, offers useful feedback, and asks the right questions during planning. We often bounced ideas off each other about navigation patterns, API contract designs, and platform-specific UX quirks—those conversations made both of us better.

I worked with Miguel on the mobile team at ShipStation when I was a Product Designer. He's a strong iOS developer, but what really stood out was his thoughtfulness and collaborative approach. He asked smart, sometimes tough questions that pushed the team to think more clearly about the user experience. Miguel wasn't afraid to dive into messy legacy code, and he was always willing to jump in and help unblock others. He worked seamlessly across teams, stayed calm under pressure, and consistently focused on building things the right way.

I had the chance to work with Miguel over six years, and while we didn't team up directly all that often, we crossed paths regularly and always had a great rapport.

Miguel's the kind of developer who makes an impact whether he's building something from the ground up or jumping in to share a thoughtful perspective. He's sharp, dependable, and has a great instinct for building solid, user-friendly apps. Even in quick conversations, he had a knack for offering insights that stuck with me.

He's easy to work with, knows his stuff, and brings a steady, thoughtful presence to any team!
